Officials Defy Heat, Remain at Capitol Desks

September Finds President, Cabinet Members and Others With No Thought of Real Summer Vacation

Executive at Ball Game

Throws First Ball at Benefit Match for Wounded Men; Appears at Band Concert

Special Dispatch to The Tribune
WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—Officials and private citizens who once fled from the capital as from a pestilence during the spells of midsummer heat now remain on, with very little thought of discomfort in even the most extreme weather, and find the President and Mrs. Harding, a number of Cabinet members and Senators forming the Finance Committee of their branch of Congress and many others without a thought of real vacation.

After the President threw out the ball at the baseball game for the benefit of wounded soldiers on Saturday afternoon he returned to the White House, and without changing his golf clothes—his lined jacket and his white shirt—put on a more formal attire, joined Mrs. Harding, Miss Abigail Harding and a few other relatives and friends on the south front balcony at the White House, where they listened to the Marine Band concert, held there every Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Harding wore a charming sport suit of white baronet satin and a small sport hat of light blue turned up in front, a style very becoming to her.

When the President appeared Laddie Boy, his faithful companion, accompanied him, and when the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner" the President stood at attention. Laddie Boy crept up close and, putting his head against the President's knee, looked sedately up in his face.

Swimming Pools Added To Many Washington Homes

Realizing the possibility of living in Washington, where the weather is so hot, many of the city's residents have added a swimming pool as one of the attractions. Mrs. John B. Henderson, whose picture is shown on the opposite page, has added a fine swimming pool to her home at 1516 Massachusetts street, and Mrs. Henderson's guests besides her son, John B. Henderson, Jr., and her daughter, Miss Beatrice Van Rensselaer Henderson, have parties of young diplomats and society folk to enjoy the bathing. Among the frequent guests of Mrs. Henderson are Mr. and Mrs. George H. Rye, who confesses to loving to swim in the beautiful pool which later is to form the center of the splendid landscape garden on the estate of several acres.

There are a number of other swimming pools connected with private residences about Washington, one being at the home of Mrs. Henry C. Corbin, and occupied by General Pershing on his return from France. Another home having a larger and much more picturesque pool is that of Mr. and Mrs. David C. Hooper, near the White House, a place occupied by the former Secretary of War and Mrs. Baker for several seasons.

Another beautiful old Georgetown estate, recently bought by the Third Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, and being reconstructed, will have a large swimming pool on the grounds. Mrs. Bliss, the wife of General George Barnett, wife of General George Barnett, U. S. Marine Corps, has had a big swimming pool constructed on her estate, at Wakefield Manor, near Front Royal, Va., where many society folk of Washington pass the week end.

The Pan-American Building, with its beautiful lines of Spanish architecture, is the new headquarters of the society of Presidents and all the visiting dignitaries to this country have been held there, and before the summer opens the building will be the scene of another brilliant chapter in its history. There are five Central American republics represented in Washington, and the society of diplomats will hold a reception with dancing the night of September 15 to celebrate the centennial of their independence. Fully a thousand invitations will be issued to diplomats, high officials and the society folk of Washington and other cities. The national airs of each country will be played, and the decorations will be of the colors of the national emblem of each.

British Ambassador Will Remain at Dark Harbor, Me.

The British Ambassador, who planned to return on the first of the month from Dark Harbor, Me., will remain on until after the middle of the month. But little outside the regular business routine of an embassy could be transacted here now with Congress in recess, all of the higher officials leaving for frequent visits to their homes for business purposes, and even the President planning for an outing of some duration.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt Has Sent a Wonderful Doll to Washington to Be Placed in the National Museum in the Department where are displayed the costumes showing the styles in women's dress in various eras of American history. The collection includes gowns worn by Martha Washington and most of the Presidents' wives down to the present Administration, including the inaugural gown of Mrs. Roosevelt. The costumes of the doll, depicting the various changes in style, are beautifully and carefully carried out. There is the simple full skirt, the hoop skirt era, the Grecian bend, the basque and the empire period, and in most of the costumes some note suggesting the costumes worn by women of to-day. Mrs. Roosevelt has already contributed many interesting things to the museum, her late husband began to contribute to the museum when he was a boy, his collection of birds, such as were found at Oyster Bay in those years, furnishing the nucleus for a very important collection and including trophies of hunt for his game after he left his Presidential seat.
